POWER WORDS

The key words and phrases you choose for your resume and cover letter can help you catch the attention of a potential employer.

When a hiring manager sees the same old resume time and time again with the same old clichéd words and overused phrases, you are guaranteeing that your resume will be tossed.

Avoid peppering your résumé with tired, stale, or empty buzzwords. Avoid using annoying jargon, anemic catchphrases, and colorless verbs. Poorly chosen words and trite phrases can destroy the interest of the reader. Power words when chosen correctly can have the opposite effect of motivating and inspiring the reader.

Every word on your resume should be working hard to highlight your talents, skills, and strengths.

Choosing positive power words for your resume will make help you stand out from your competition. Use words that have substance and impact. Use words that are descriptive, compelling, and dynamic.

You'll need to carefully select what you're going to say on your resume, but also be conscientious of how you say it. In a format such as a resume with limited space, you need to choose powerful, effective words that will get your message across immediately. You need to be as specific as possible, leaving no room for reluctance in a recruiter's mind. And you need to be concise and get to your point quickly.

Distill everything you want to say into a selection of carefully chosen words, sentences, and bullet points, so that someone reading your resume can see your accomplishments at a moment's glance, and most importantly, be impressed by them. Careful, concise, powerful language is the only way to achieve this goal.

Keep, it simple. Avoid bloat. Remove personal pronouns and articles. Keep track of tense.

When describing your experience and accomplishments, it is important that you use the right verb or adjective. Use active voice rather than passive voice. Site accomplishments and achievements by using statistics and numbers to show improvement. Provide examples.
